Café owner left feeling helpless after collision

JEREMY NOLAIS
@METRONEWS.CA

Café owner Jim Wou had no idea how bad the damage was until he arrived on scene Saturday night.

He had closed up Tastebuds & Co. Café for the night around 4 p.m. Five hours later a call came from a neighbour advising him a vehicle had crashed into the shop, located at 845–5th Ave. SW.

"I drove down there," Wou said yesterday. "I saw four or five fire engines and five police cars, and I'm thinking 'Holy, what exactly drove through my café?'"

As it turned out a Black Top cab had careened out of control and plowed through the front window of the café.

Ruth Chiinka and her boyfriend were in an apartment above the café at the time. They raced down to see what had happened.

"It was chaos," she said. "There was smoke, dust, debris, everything, and people yelling ... it was a really terrible scene."

Wou said he is now in a holding pattern as he waits for insurance adjusters to survey the damage sometime today.

"It's a really weird feeling, because if the store wasn't so damaged I would be able to go in and clean up," he said. "There's really nothing I can do."

Stabbing, victim's condition improving: Police

The condition of the victim of a Marlborough stabbing that occurred on Saturday evening has been upgraded to serious but stabilized, according to Acting Insp. Darren Cave.

Police responded to a complaint of a stabbing at around 9 p.m. and a 40-year-old male with multiple stab wounds was taken to hospital in life-threatening condition while a second man, also in the same basement suite, was taken into custody at the scene.

The incident is under investigation and it is still unknown if the two men knew each other. METRO

Highrise evacuated after fire

A fire in the trash room of a downtown highrise forced approximately 70 people to evacuate their apartments on Saturday evening, according to a release.

Though fire crews were able to put the fire out quickly, smoke rose through the garbage chutes filling several floors with smoke. Smoke was then systematically removed from each floor using large fans to blow in fresh air. The incident occurred on the 300 block of 14th Avenue Southwest. No one was injured and the cause of the fire is still under investigation. METRO

Advance polls open once more

Early voting numbers promising but not definitive: Elections Canada
Nearly 33,500 took part locally in 2008 advance polls

Anyone still wanting to have their say before election day can head to an advance polling station today between noon and 8 p.m.

A constant flow of participants stopped by to cast an advance ballot on Friday and Saturday, said Frank Saulnier, spokesman for Elections Canada, but he was hesitant to speculate on the total number of votes cast.

"We don't count the ballots until May 2 so it is hard to say," he said. "It was busy and steady on Friday — and that goes for pretty much across the province ... but it is normal to have a fair number of people (at the advance polling)."

He wanted to have his say in what he described as an "important" election but was worried about a potential conflict with a surgery scheduled around the actual voting day May 2.

Wiens said only one ballot box was open to service roughly 50 people in line at the southwest station he visited around 1 p.m. Nevertheless, he felt the experience was worthwhile.

"Nobody seemed upset over the wait," the 60-year-old said. "It was a rather jovial group."

Saulnier said work commitments and travel seem to be the most common reasons for people to cast their vote early.

Questions: 1) What is your full name, age and current occupation? 2) What is your past political experience? 3) What do you think is the biggest issue in your constituency? 4) What are you doing to get more people engaged in the election process?

Calgary West

ROB ANDERS
CONSERVATIVE

1) 39 years of age; Member of Parliament for Calgary West.

2) This is my sixth election since when I was first elected in 1997. Before that I worked as the director of Canadians Against Forced Unionism, a project of the National Citizens' Coalition. I graduated with a bachelors degree in political science from the University of Calgary in 1994.

3) The single biggest issue in Calgary West is the economy.

4) I have been door-knocking for nine hours a day since the third day of this campaign.

ANNA WAGNER
GREEN PARTY

2) My past political experience involves voting for the Green party and offering my time as a volunteer.

3) The biggest issue in my constituency is that of representation. The people of Calgary West do not feel like their voices are being heard in Parliament the way they want. They do not feel that their needs are being heard. I have had several emails from constituents about this. They feel neglected by their MP. I believe that the main job description of an MP is to be the voice of the people who voted to put you in that position. Your job is to have an open dialogue with them to decide how you should represent them on bills in Parliament, and then to provide them with followup as to the outcome, and ask for their feedback.

4) I am trying to get more people engaged in the electoral process by having a strong social media presence on Facebook and Twitter, and by writing regular blog posts. I also have regularly updated videos that people link to off the QR codes on my postcards that have been distributed. More to come.

JANICE KINCH
LIBERAL

1) 68 years old; assistant professor of nursing at the University of Calgary and registered nurse.

2) Mainly working on other people's campaigns at all three levels of government as well as acting as visible patient advocate and involvement with Equal Voice Canada, a multi-partisan organization dedicated to involving more women in politics.

3) We have the university of Calgary in our constituency and a very large health network, so I would say health and education.

4) Most people I talk to I take the opportunity to remind them that this is an opportunity to have their voices heard in our government and that this is the human rights issue. We have the right to vote and it is our responsibility as Canadians to vote.

ANDRE VACHON
MARXIST-LENINIST PARTY

1) 64; heavy equipment operator on pipeline construction.

2) I have been an activist with CPC(ML) for decades, as well as having been a candidate for the MLPC on several occasions.

3) We need a new direction for our economy with public resources under public control to serve public good and thus safeguard the wellbeing of all.

4) I call on my fellow workers and all our allies to elect worker politicians who will fight for empowerment of the electorate and democratic renewal in Canada.

Aldermen get nod for wise ward spending in report

Despite a tight budget, aldermen are on track with their ward spending, according to a recently released report. In the first quarter of 2011, all 14 aldermen had spent less than $35,000 of the $145,203 budget.

Ald. Gord Lowe, who spent just over $16,000, said working within the limited budget can be a challenge.

Elections Canada: Enforcement complaint-driven, officials won't monitor Twitter ◆ Rationale to keep early tallies from influencing other voters

JOE LOFARO
@METRONEWS.CA

Posting election results on social media sites before polls close on May 2 could land you a $25,000 fine, Elections Canada says.

Section 329 of the Canada Elections Act prohibits transmission of results before all polling stations have closed.

"It's important for us just to remind people that this is still on the books because there are possible ramifications to it," said Elections Canada spokesperson John Enright.

Ottawa blogger Peter Raaymakers kickstarted a discussion on Twitter and since then Internet users worldwide have been weighing in on the ban.

On Thursday, he tweeted: "@mrbarnabyjones You really think people in the West are influenced by how people in the East are voting?"

Karren Brown from Alberta tweeted: "Think the law has be to (sic) reviewed & updated, but will respect Elxns Cda rules. Not a Conservative."

"It's not up to Elections Canada to amend this, we're only the administrator. The law is written by Parliament."
JOHN ENRIGHT, ELECTIONS CANADA SPOKESPERSON

University of Ottawa Law professor Michael Geist offered his expertise this month in an affidavit for a superior court case challenging the constitutionality of the provision. He wrote that such a ban in 2011 is "simply not possible without inflicting enormous harm to freedom of expression and public confidence in the election system."

The Conservative campaign's military precision with events has raised more than a few eyebrows during four weeks of electioneering.

Stephen Harper ensures his limited time with reporters is always held in front of partisan crowds, who cheer his answers — and on Saturday, purposely drowned out an unwelcome question.

But Easter morning brought a new development. Harper held a photo opportunity with more than a dozen cherubic kids at a suburban Victoria home. After he gave a brief formal address, the hostess asked the strategically posed children to go on an Easter egg hunt.

A Conservative campaign official quickly jumped in and said the kids were to stay in place while the national media asked Harper their allotted four daily questions, as the children squirmed and chafed.

A Conservative party spokesman later explained that the children had to stay for the serious business because Harper wanted to take part in their Easter egg hunt.

PARTY LEADERS

Neck and neck, face to face

The Liberal and NDP campaigns, which some polls suggest are in a tight race for second place in this election, came face to face yesterday.

There have been plenty of instances during this campaign in which various leaders have crossed paths as they jet from city to city, but there hasn't yet been an event two leaders attended at the same time.

The campaign clash comes as Ignatieff — as well as the other party leaders — have set their sights on Layton in recent days.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Vandals target Grits, Bob Rae no exception

Slashed car tires, hateful graffiti, ripped campaign signs. Vandalism has spread throughout Toronto.

Liberal heavyweight Bob Rae and Eric Hoskins, a Liberal MPP, woke up on Saturday to see their car tires hacked.

While Rae's reaction was guarded, he acknowledged this is the "first campaign in which something like this has happened. Obviously signs get torn down and other things happen in a campaign ... I'm sorry this has happened, but life goes on," he said

"It sounds like it's fairly widespread," he said of the vandalism, adding that when his wife took the car to get a new tire, somebody else was already at the shop whose car had been damaged by a key.

At least two dozen cases of vandalism have been reported in the past couple of days.

TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Cameras not welcomed on Easter morn

A couple in Victoria, B.C., got a rude Easter morning awakening when they wandered out onto their balcony to find the national news media camped in their backyard.

Equipment had been set up in the yard so that media could cover a photo opportunity with Prime Minister Stephen Harper next door.

The landlord made arrangements without the knowledge of the couple who rent the home.

Rap scene booms in Benghazi

One song is Youth of the Revolution, which rap group Music Masters wrote after the uprising began in mid-February.

The freewheeling rap scene developing in Benghazi shows how much has changed in eastern Libya in recent months. Rap, like other forms of Western culture, was despised by Gadhafi, who burned foreign musical instruments and books after he seized power in 1969.

Activists detained by Syrian forces

More than 300 killed since uprising began: Human rights group

Syrian security forces detained dozens of opposition activists and fired from rooftops in a seaside town yesterday as authorities turned to pinpoint raids after days of bloodshed brought international condemnation and defections from President Bashar Assad's regime.

The strategy, described by a rights activist, appeared to be aimed at rattling the opposition's leadership and showing that the state's ability to conduct arrest sweeps has not changed despite abolishing nearly 50-year-old emergency laws last week.

The rising violence — more than 120 people dead since Friday — brought calls from the watchdog group Human Rights Watch for a UN inquiry.

Great divide in Yemen parties

Deep divisions within Yemen's opposition appeared to doom a proposal for the president to step down within a month, raising the prospect of more bloodshed in the nation.

MGA winz legal fight with Mattel

Mattel Inc. lost its claim to the billion-dollar Bratz doll line on Thursday when a U.S. federal jury awarded the copyright to upstart rival MGA Entertainment Inc., along with more than $88 million US in damages for misappropriation of trade secrets. The verdict was a staggering blow to the toy giant, which has long claimed the smaller company stole the idea for the pouty-lipped toys that gave Mattel's platinum-haired Barbie a run for her money after decades of fashion doll dominance. The verdict will allow MGA to regain control of its flagship doll and to once again try to compete with Barbie to dominate the market.

'Cyber' insurance for tweets?

New policies cover liabilities of foot-in-mouth posts

As more and more companies turn to Facebook, Twitter and other social-media sites to market products, communicate with customers and collect information, they leave themselves open to lawsuits over intellectual property infringement and defamation.

And where there's risk, there's the insurance sector. Brokers in Canada are starting to develop coverage for the consequences of unruly posts.

The liability risk stems from the fact that many companies don't have clear, written policies for social networking, says Eric Dolden, a Vancouver insurance lawyer.

"'My boss is a big fat cow' is a very common tweet," he says. "But people often stupidly then say where they work and who their boss is in the tweet."

The legal ramifications can be significant. "We've seen people, in their personal capacities — the 'big-fat-cow boss' — bringing a lawsuit against the individual," Dolden says. "And we've also seen the company take action because their brand is suddenly viral, negatively."

Dolden says demand for social-media coverage — which can cost up to $100,000 for a $10-million policy that protects against data loss and liability — is mostly from corporations. But it's only a matter of time before firms offer personal insurance lines, much like automobile insurance for drivers.

"I think it's going to come for individuals. It's probably about five years out." THE CANADIAN PRESS

METRO CALGARY

Quick — try to name two candidates running in your riding.

Shockingly, I'm not convinced that many Calgarians could. Voter turnout in Calgary has been notoriously dreadful and next week's federal election promises to be no different.

Don't let last year's municipal election fool you; No amount of purple-wearing flash mobs, Facebook groups or Twitter campaigns will get this city voting.

But why should we anyway? We all know the Conservatives are going to win. I mean, that's why you're not going to vote, right? I know, I know, if all the people that thought like that actually went out and voted, another party might stand a chance. But who has the energy? We've already made it so easy for the Conservative party to win Stephen Harper doesn't even have to visit his own riding.

"We all know the Conservatives are going to win. I mean, that's why you're not going to vote, right? I know, I know, if all the people that thought like that actually went out and voted, another party might stand a chance."

His fellow Calgary-area candidates also seem to be in the know, seemingly putting as little energy into their campaign as ever. If they aren't showing up to the debates, why should I?

Thanks to social media, finding out about your candidates has probably never been easier. But I spend roughly four hours a day on Facebook, poking strangers, growing crops and untagging unflattering photos. Maybe candidates should try hiding their platforms in Angry Bird's golden eggs. Now that would get my attention.

But then there's the issue of time. Who has it? I've heard that between some quick research and heading to the polls, the voting process takes "a feels-like-forever" two hours, or roughly 0.008 per cent of the time we spend cheering for the losing Calgary Flames. And if I'm busy researching the elections, who is going to hold my spot while I'm in line for tickets at Chinook? For me, it really comes down to priorities.

This year's elections take place on a Monday night, which also happens to be Calgary's best wing night. I've mapped out my polling station, which is on the way to the Kensington Pub, if the line to vote isn't too long, I have promised myself that I will at least not purposely avoid the station.

Finally, our city is busier than most and because our prime minister is from here, it's safe to assume that he already has our back.

Seriously though. Maybe this upcoming Monday alter the priorities and get out to vote. And then reward yourself by swinging by for a basket of wings.

#elxn41: Be Heard

Metro invited Federation of Canadian Municipalities CEO Brock Carlton and columnist Ivor Tossell to discuss urban issues and what's missing from the federal election campaign. The following are excerpts from the online chat.

METRO: Why should a federal campaign address urban issues?

BROCK: The federal government has a large role to play in our cities and communities. Their policies and programs have a direct impact on cities and towns. The feds cannot deliver to Canadians without working with cities. Our country is too big and complex to work in silos. And we need national leadership from the feds on key issues that affect our economy, the environment and social issues.

IVOR: Well, you could ask, what does the federal government have to do with health care, which is also a provincial matter? The fact is that cities are a central part of Canadian life, just like health care. A national vision for what it means to live in a Canadian city is important — it's quality of life.

Mystery person hops to it to help woman and pet

An anonymous donor has purchased a $50,000 insurance policy to help an Oklahoma woman keep her pet kangaroo as a therapy pet.

The Broken Arrow city council is considering an exotic animal ordinance exemption that would allow Christie Carr to keep Irwin, the partially paralyzed red kangaroo, within city limits.

Council could vote May 3 on a proposal that would allow exotic animal owners to keep their pets if they obtain a newly created permit. The permit would require them to have a liability insurance policy for any injuries inflicted by the animal, certification showing the animal has adequate housing for its health, and meet all U.S. federal and state guidelines for licensing, among other provisions.

Carr said she couldn't have afforded to purchase such a policy and even contemplated moving out of Broken Arrow to continue caring for the animal. Coun. Richard Carter said the ordinance exemption is designed to allow Christie to keep Irwin within city limits while safeguarding residents from potential harm the animal might cause. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kitsch Kitsch, Bang Bang

Friday Night Lights star gets so into character for role as South African war photographer in The Bang Bang Club, he needed counseling to get back out

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Taking on the role of photojournalist Kevin Carter in The Bang Bang Club was hardly a vacation for Taylor Kitsch.

"I didn't sleep. It was a zoo to shoot," he says of the film, which tells the true story of a group of photographers covering the violent last days of apartheid in South Africa. "It wasn't a fun shoot for me at all. I had a lot of kidney problems playing Kev, through the diet and losing 30-something pounds."

Known to audiences for his work on Friday Night Lights, and starring alongside Hugh Jackman in Wolverine, Kitsch threw himself into playing Carter, starting before heading to Johannesburg for filming.

"I had two months to prep on my own in Austin, so that entailed shadowing a photographer, getting a Leica, which is about a 60-year-old film camera that Kev used, developing myself with that, shooting about five to 10 rolls a day and then losing the 30-something pounds just running every day in Austin," he explains.

"There's so much pressure I personally put on myself to do this guy justice, so I prepped and prepped so much. It brings your game up more. I would've done anything to get where I needed to be, to feel I could let the scene go. I was a wreck. It's an incredible amount of energy."

But any amount of effort was more than worth it, Kitsch insists, given how badly he wanted to do the film. "Even reading the script and fighting for the role, it was a matter of, like, I know I can play this guy truthfully," he says. "There's something that I know I could hit with him."

But while he worked relentlessly on getting into character, Kitsch wasn't necessarily prepared for how difficult it would be to get out of character, given the intense scenes Carter lived through. (Carter won a Pulitzer Prize for a photo of a young Sudanese girl resting being stalked by a vulture.)

"Some counseling was needed, and just separating yourself and being incredibly conscious of it and being OK that it's taking time to let go was a big thing for me.

"Playing other characters, I can let go and I can laugh a lot. It's not as heavy, obviously. But you take it home with you."

Luckily he won't be taking as much home with him again soon, as his next projects are more on the fun side. Of course, even his upcoming Battleship — based on the board game — isn't without its gravitas.

"Just because it's this big film doesn't mean we can't have a very, very intense moment here or there, or have loss," he says.

Speaking of aliens, Kitsch will be keeping with the action genre as the title character in John Carter of Mars.

"I was looking at a 100-foot green screen and there was an X on it at the 75-foot mark, and that was supposed to be a ship that I'm blowing up," he says. "In situations like that, escapism is a lot harder as an actor, and tests you in different ways.

"With Bang Bang, I had a f—ing child and a vulture. If you can't put yourself in a present moment there, then you've got to go back to New York and study a bit more."

Potter star Watson to transfer from Brown

A spokeswoman for Harry Potter star Emma Watson says she will be transferring from Brown University to another university in the autumn.

Vanessa Davies denied reports that the 21-year-old actress was "bullied out" of the Rhode Island university, saying there was no truth in reports by a number of online publications who cited classmates and "insiders."

Davies said Saturday that Watson, who plays Hermione in the wizard movie series, has decided to pursue a different course not offered at Brown.

She added that the star "has absolutely loved her time at Brown" and made many good friends there.

Watson has recently taken time out of her studies to focus on her movie career. She has said that her first days in college were difficult.

Davies did not identify the university Watson will be transferring to.

Yikes! Her first dance!

This week, the Disney movie Prom premieres, reminding us how fun and scary a school dance can be Dr. Susan Newman, Ph.D., social psychologist and author of The Book of NO: 250 Ways to Say It — and Mean It and Stop People-Pleasing Forever, addresses parents' worries

SAM D'AMATO
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS

WORRY ONE: Dances are basically foreplay for teen sex. I've discussed responsibility with my kid, but I am worried the advice will be forgotten after a night of dancing and too many episodes of Gossip Girl.
SAYS THE DOCTOR: The values and advice you have shared with your teenager hopefully have "sunk in" by the time prom rolls around. It is up to your child to be smart when it comes to sex. Worry about things you can orchestrate. Send your child off to have fun, but with a quiet reminder to be careful.

WORRY TWO: Someone else's kids are going to get drunk and drive. How do I warn my kid without sounding like a public service announcement?
SAYS THE DOCTOR: You absolutely want to sound like a public service announcement! In the weeks leading up to the dance, remind your child of teen drunk driving tragedies. You can soften your parental stand by reminding your child that he or she is the most important thing in your life and it's your job to keep him or her safe. Sounds soppy, but it's true.

WORRY THREE: My child is an introvert and will probably spend the entire evening against the wall. What should I do?
SAYS THE DOCTOR: You might suggest that your child arrange to attend the dance with a group of friends or one friend. Beyond that, there's not a lot a parent can do ... and trying to hard makes the situation worse. If you try to discuss it, your child will tell you don't understand — and you probably don't. It hurts parents to see a child suffer, but as parents we have to accept the fact that we can't protect our children from every insult.

WORRY FOUR: There's an after-prom party at some other kid's house. The parents are out of town. There will be no chaperones. When do I storm in and act like a police officer?
SAYS THE DOCTOR: You don't. Why can't parents say NO anymore? The teen brain is not fully mature, particularly the part that thinks ahead, weighs consequences, and manages emotional impulses. Parties without chaperones tend to get out of hand easily: uninvited guests appear, alcohol and drugs get consumed, noise levels rise and judgment fails. Neighbours call the police and your child winds up in a situation he or she never intended. Boundaries, parents, that's your job. Say no or offer to hold the party at your home.

Will Kate Middleton wear a family heirloom?

It's guaranteed that Kate Middleton will wear a tiara on her wedding day. What we don't know is if it will be old, new or borrowed from the royal vault.

Gifting a royal bride with a tiara as a wedding present is a long-standing royal tradition. For her wedding, the Queen presented Diana with The Cambridge Lovers Knot tiara, which was made in 1911 for Queen Mary. Sarah Ferguson was given a tiara the royals purchased from Garrard. Sophie, Countess of Wessex, was given a custom-made tiara. It featured jewels from a necklace belonging to Queen Victoria.

What do pankcake mix, barbecue sauce, plain yogurt, nacho chips and chicken have in common? They're all used to create this unique dish

I never back down from a challenge, so when Canadian Family magazine asked me to participate in the launch of its Food Awards, I was game.

The awards honour the top brands used in Canadian households, and will be announced in a special Winter Food Issue. In the meantime, readers can vote and participate in the Canadian Family Creative Cook Challenge (canadianfamily.ca/creative-cook-challenge), during which they must use ingredients provided by Canadian Family to create a dessert.

My challenge involved pancake mix, plain yogurt, barbecue sauce and more. I came up with Crunchy Chicken Salad Waffle Wraps. I used the pancake mix and yogurt help to create a light fluffy waffle that stays soft and can be used to wrap the chicken, or simply serve it on top.

EMILY RICHARDS

Be sure to have ranch dipping sauce or hot sauce to drizzle for added flavour.

Preparation:

1. Place pancake mix in bowl; set aside. In another bowl, whisk eggs, yogurt, milk and butter. Whisk into pancake mix until smooth.
2. Heat waffle iron. For each waffle brush lightly with oil; pour in scant ½ cup (125 mL) of the batter. Close lid and cook for about 4 minutes or until steam stops and waffle is golden. Remove gently and repeat with remaining batter; set waffles aside.
3. Crunchy Chicken: In shallow baking dish, whisk barbecue sauce, mustard and thyme. Add chicken and turn to coat evenly; set aside for 10 minutes or cover and refrigerate 8 hours.
4. Meanwhile, combine nachos and mum mums in resealable bag and crush into fine crumbs. Add parsley. Place a few chicken strips in bag and shake to coat. Place coated chicken on parchment paper lined baking sheet and repeat with remaining chicken. Bake in 425 F (220 C) oven for 15 minutes or until no longer pink inside. Top waffles with lettuce and chicken.

Making green

Canadian companies becoming leaders in clean tech

BEN KNIGHT
GREEN@METRONEWS.CA

With each Earth Day that passes, our world becomes more ecologically aware. New, emerging technologies are greener, and vast profits are out there for innovators with the right product, in the right place, at the right time.

Canadian companies are beginning to do very well in the clean-tech field — but not without some considerable risk.

"You have to approach the market in a very strategic manner," says Gael Mourant, president and CEO of ARXX, a leading supplier of Insulating Concrete Forms (ICFs) for energy-efficient construction. "The construction industry is very averse to change. You have to make people comfortable with the idea they can do things differently, but at the same time, actually get a better product at a more cost-effective price."

ARXX is based in Cobourg, Ont. Mourant says proximity to the United States is a significant advantage for Canadian clean-tech firms.

"Americans are very receptive to working with Canadian companies, because they see Canadians as being honest and forthright, and as innovators," she notes. "Primarily, Canadians are very adaptable. I think we're very open to new ideas. The idea of green buildings and energy savings is very rooted in Canada."

Scott MacDonald is a partner at Emerald Technology Ventures, an investment firm specializing in clean-tech start-ups. He sees deteriorating global infrastructure as a huge opportunity for Canadian firms.

"There are 70 to 100-year-old assets – around the world – where they don't have technology and innovation right now," he says. "We're trying to make the grid smarter. We're trying to identify where leaks in water systems are. That's not an emerging market. That's a market that exists, that isn't presently efficient. We're taking real business problems that exist today, and finding clever solutions that are better for the environment."

But even though the market for cleaner products and practices can only grow, MacDonald warns the business risks are very real.

"Nothing in life is low-risk," he says. "We mitigate risk in certain ways, but clean-tech is high-risk. It's for big boys and girls. But the prize is so big in these markets, that Canada should absolutely — as a resource-based economy — be players in this space."

Unconventional and a risk taker. That describes Ottawa interior designer Jason Bellaire, who says that you have to get past your fear and believe in yourself if you're going to be successful in business.

After struggling with his career in his 20s, Bellaire decided to go back to school at the age of 30 to study interior design and architecture.

Jason raised a few eyebrows in the industry when he started his own company six months after graduation.

"It was hammered into our heads at school that you had to apprentice for five or six years before going out on your own. I had to overcome my fear and now looking back over the last two years I can't believe how far I've come."

Jason and his partner, Denise Hulaj, are the hot new design team taking our nation's capital by storm with 10 projects on the go.

He has this advice for people who are thinking about starting their own business.

"Plunge into the darkness, ignore the monsters and don't be afraid to ask for advice."

Jason's tips

Tools to a successful business design

- Believe in yourself and your talents.
- Don't make the same mistakes twice.
- Hang out with other successful people and learn.

Life after the lay-off

Don't fall into failure-mode The future is bright!

A job loss effects more than just one person.

Communication
Discuss with your family what your job search strategy is and what steps you have taken or plan to take in the near future.

Communication is critical in families, particularly in times of stress and crisis when many people tend to withdraw.

Empathy
Everyone needs support and understanding. If you have children, listen to their concerns and keep in mind that most children are egocentric.

SUBMITTED

▶ A job loss can effect your whole family.

Optimism
Be a role model for your family in how to deal with crisis and change. Your children will be in a job search someday and will remember how you handled it.

They learn from your behavior, so it's best to model positive behavior.

Self-confidence
If you have confidence in yourself, your family and significant other will have more confidence that you can and will find another job.

You need to think and act in terms of when you find your next job and not if you will find another job.

Conflict management
Accept that there will be disagreements and work to resolve them. It takes less energy to deal with a conflict when it first arises than it does after months of letting it build up.

Dealing with disagreements openly can help everyone move in a positive direction. Know that you might not agree at the end of your discussion. n fact, you may have to come to an agreement to disagree with each other at some point.

Adaptability
During times of stress, it is normal to resort back to old, established and comfortable ways of doing things, but stressful times are often when new ideas and strategies need to be tried. Encourage each other to be flexible.

Predators knock out the Ducks

Nick Spaling scored his second goal of the game at 4:53 of the third period and the Nashville Predators closed out their first post-season series victory to advance to the Western Conference semifinals, beating the Anaheim Ducks 4-2 yesterday.

Steve Sullivan scored a goal, David Legwand had an empty-netter and Jordin Tootoo assisted on Spaling's goals. The Predators won the series 4-2 in their sixth post-season in seven seasons.

Jason Blake scored a power-play goal, and Teemu Selanne also had a goal for the Ducks. Anaheim looked tired early after blowing a lead late before losing Game 5 in overtime. They looked tired late as coach Randy Carlyle went heavily with his top two lines, trying to rally.

The fifth-seeded Predators must wait to see who they play next.

Ben Smith scored on a rebound at 15:30 of overtime and the defending Stanley Cup champion Chicago Blackhawks beat the Vancouver Canucks 4-3 last night to force a seventh game in the opening-round series.

The Canucks, with the NHL's best record during the regular season, have lost three straight after it appeared they were in control of the series. Game 7 is tomorrow in Vancouver.

Luongo didn't start the game but was called upon in the third period, when Cory Schneider had to be helped off the ice after he was injured as he tried to stop Michael Frolik's penalty shot that tied it at 3.
